

Helping Canadians stay healthy for over 6 years

Montreal, November 17th 2017 - Canadian health officials are predicting a severe flu season this year - but with Quebec doctors no longer vaccinating, and many other provinces lowering the amount of public flu clinics, Canadians are scrambling to find out where to go to get their influenza vaccines.

Vaccines411.ca wants to help. With over 6,300 registered vaccinating clinics in our online database; in just 3 clicks we are aiming to help Canadians stay healthy this flu season.

After simply entering their postal codes and selecting a vaccine category, users are redirected to a list of vaccination clinics including a growing number of participating pharmacies nearest to their homes. Vaccines411.ca provides addresses, phone numbers and Google map links for more than 6,300 locations across Canada. Even better, a growing number of clinics are now offering an online appointment booking service; empowering Canadians to make an appointment 24/7 365 days a year with no calling and no waiting time!

The Southern hemisphere is a good predictor of what kind of flu season to expect in Canada, according to a report by CBC news. Australia was hit hard over the past few months with H3N2 – a flu strain that’s notorious for causing severe illness, especially in seniors. With an already increased number of flu cases being reported in major cities like Toronto – Canadians are encouraged to get their flu shots earlier this season.

Vaccines411 understands the stresses that come with the flu season. So for a limited time only, we are offering a lucky winner and a friend a chance to “Chill Out By The Sea” with an all-inclusive trip for two to Dominican Republic compliments of Air Transat. Enter daily on our website to increase your chances of winning.
