

New website helps find flu vaccine clinics

Special to The Times

August 22, 2013

The start of the school year is barely a week away, and that means the start of the flu season is not far off either.

Vaccines are an option, and with that, one question often arises: where can you go and find a vaccine clinic? Now there's an online answer. Vaccines411.ca is an online postal code-based vaccination clinic finder, which also includes reliable immunization resources for Canadians to easily find the vaccine resources they seek.

Currently, there are 714 vaccine clinics in British Columbia that are listed on Vaccines411.ca, specifically 16 vaccine clinics in Abbotsford and five in Mission.

Vaccines411.ca counts over 3,400 vaccine clinics including: Public Health Services clinics, pharmacies, doctor's offices, travel clinics and more.

Looking for a vaccine is simple: enter your postal code; select a category; select the wanted vaccine. You will be presented with a list of the closest vaccine clinics in your area.

Vaccines411.ca is also going mobile, so health information seekers can search information on the go.
